COUNTY FIREMEN TONIGHT TO HONOR JAMES E. GROOME

Testimonial Dinner To Be Given Retiring President of
Bucks Co. Firemen's Ass'n

SERVED FOR 25 YEARS

Organization Achieved A Record
Which is Outstanding
Under His Guidance

Tonight volunteer firemen of Bucks County will honor James E. Groome, who has retired as president of the Bucks County Firemen's Association after serving 25 years as head of the organization. Tribute will be paid and testimony given to the work done by Mr. Groome, whom it is believed, sets a record for having served as the active head of such a group for such a period.

JAMES E. GROOME

of time. Groome will be the honored guest at a testimonial dinner at Quakertown.

Now, James E. Groome, or "Jimmy Groome" as his friends and associates call him, has been an indefatigable worker in volunteer firemen's ranks. He has "eaten" and "slept" the affairs of the volunteer fireman.

It wasn't a hobby with Groome but a firm and fixed determination to conquer a menace which was rearing its head and threatening the community. "I had read much and studied much and was astounded at the huge fire losses," said Groome. "There is something I'm going to smite in my little way," was his decision and during the past 25 years he had never deviated from that chosen course.

The head of the county firemen's organization set about to study statistics given out by the National Board of Fire Underwriters. He studiously applied himself to an analysis of these statistics. He concluded that the firemen in Bucks County were only doing half a job in trying to put out fires after they had started. His first step was to start educating the 97,000 population of Bucks County along the lines of fire prevention. He hammered fire prevention at every opportunity until he became known as an outstanding exponent of fire prevention. He kept this as his chief theme for 20 years. He talked to firemen, bankers, grange members, service clubs and to every group he could reach.

A Fine Record

(By "The Stroller")
I read in the "Retailing Home Furnishings" publication, under date of June 16th, that:

"One of the all-time records for continuous service in a single mill in the carpet industry was set last Saturday when William G. Buckman, secretary-treasurer of Thos. L. Leedom Co., celebrated 55 years with the firm. He began with Leedom in June of 1886 when the company moved to Bristol from Philadelphia (it began there in 1865), and he did general office work until 1920, when he was elected a director and named assistant secretary-treasurer. In 1936, he was named secretary-treasurer. Charles Leedom, president, is the only other member of the firm who was with the mill when it began operations in Bristol."

Germany Denies 'Retaliation'

Berlin, June 20—The German Government today denied the charge of "retaliation" concerning its request that U. S. Consular offices and American Express bureaus in Germany and German-occupied territories be closed down by July 15.

On the contrary, a Wilhelmstrasse spokesman insisted, Germany has long had conclusive evidence that American officials in the Reich have been actively engaged in aiding espionage work on behalf of Great Britain.

"The time to move against American Consulates was over-ripe," the spokesman said. "Germany held her hand until now merely for the sake of undisturbed German-American relations."

"It is not true that our action was in retaliation for the American action in closing German consulates and tourist agencies in the U. S."

In addition to six specific cases of alleged espionage by American officials cited yesterday, Germany has records of "dozens of similar affairs" which have been investigated during the past year, the spokesman said.

"Thus it has become consistently more necessary to take action against activities which lie outside the sphere of consular duties," he continued.

"The evidence against many American representatives is conclusive. But until now the Reich, in the interest of good relations, remained tolerant and permitted the situation to continue."

THE GREAT GAME OF POLITICS

By FRANK R. KENT
(Distributed by McNaught Syndicate, Inc.)

They May Wait Too Long

Washington, June 19.

AMONG the few who think clearly in Washington these days and are neither numbed by the almost incredible confusion of the defense administration nor embroiled in the exceedingly bitter defense politics, there is increasing concern.

over the price situation. Some of these question whether already the time has not passed when the Government can freeze both prices and wages, thus keeping each from playing upon the other.

AS things are, they mutually boost each other and there is no real way to keep the level of either within bounds. Couple this with the fact that all efforts to stabilize Federal Clair J. Merkel, the high school principal, expects to continue his studies at the Summer school of Temple University in order to qualify for the position of supervising principal, which has been vacant since the resignation of J. B. Geissinger a year ago. Mr. Geissinger at that time took up a similar position in the North Wales schools.

Gifts totaling more than $250 with various stipulations for the benefit of the school activities, have been provided by the Doylestown Parent-Teacher Association, according to the past president, Earl D. Blair.

The sum of $100 was presented for the support of the girls' athletics in the local schools with the provision that the sum of $50 be given to the tennis teams which, under the direction of Mrs. Mabel McCord Elliott, have made an enviable record. At least 60 candidates reported for tennis at the beginning of the season.

The remaining sum of $50 will be given to Coach Lillian V. Kelley to be used by her because many of the girls' athletic ventures do not receive adequate support to make them self-sustaining.

A fund of $100 was created to be known as the Washington Loan Fund and the idea is that it will enable worthy seniors to take the annual senior class trip to Washington, D. C.

This Spring the P. T. A., introducing an innovation contributed the sum of $65, making possible the awarding of three trips to Washington for the benefit of seniors.

Guest speaker at a meeting of the Baptist Missionary Society, this week, at the home of Rev. and Mrs. Wheeler Boggess, Doylestown, was Miss Frances Tencote, a returned missionary from Mallore, India.

Thirty members attended and an offering was taken to be sent to the Ramapattan College, India, for the support of a native student for one year.

Miss Tencote, the speaker of the afternoon, was educational director of all Baptist work in South India and a special friend of the Rev. and Mrs. Boggess. Miss Tencote explained that the Baptists are responsible for the religious work of 15,000 square miles in South India, comprising 12 million people. Out of 1400 churches in South India 1200 are self-supporting and at the present time there are 4000 missionaries in India without any support due to the war.

Miss Tencote wore a "Sari," the native dress and many tokens from India, a collection made by Mrs. Boggess, was shown and explained.

At the close of the meeting the guests were entertained in the garden of the Rev. and Mrs. Boggess at a real Indian lunch of rice and curry of lamb and punch. Rev. Boggess demonstrated how rice is eaten in India with the fingers as no knives, forks or spoons are used there.

Commission Approves Construction of Siding

HARRISBURG, June 20—The Public Utility Commission announced today it has authorized the Pennsylvania Railroad to construct a grade crossing carrying an industrial siding across Beaver Dam Road about 125 feet northeast of the road's junction with Green Lane, in Bristol Township, Bucks County.

The siding will connect the site of the proposed addition to the Fleetwings plant along Beaver Dam Road on what was formerly the Larzelere farm.

The rails for the siding are now being placed and pipes have been placed to carry the water of the Delaware Division of the Pennsylvania Canal, which will be filled in where the siding crosses that water-course.

Tells Exchange Club About Munitions Work

W. H. Thompson, vice-president of the Hunter Manufacturing Corporation, with plants in Bristol Township and Croydon, was the guest speaker before the Exchange Club at the Elks' Home, here, last evening.

Mr. Thompson explained the work of the two plants in the loading of shells up to the 6-inch size. The processes involved were mentioned and the transportation of the finished product discussed. He declared that it was his hope that these two plants would do all in their power to meet the defense needs, but that safety was and will continue to be the chief factor in both plants.

The speaker also stated that the plants would continue after the defense boom was over. The expansion of the plants is being governed in part by the needs that will be present for a peace-time transfer.

Use Ziegfeld Technique In Selecting Follies Beauties

Exactly the same system which Florenz Ziegfeld and his stage director, Ned Wayburn, used for the selection of their Follies beauties was followed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer in choosing the showgirls for "Ziegfeld Girl," spectacular musical coming to the Grand Theatre for a three-day engagement.

Ziegfeld believed that a pretty face was the first requisite, then an attractive figure. Next he required a girl to be able to dance, or at least to be able to carry herself gracefully. Applicants were lined up backstage and advanced one at a time across the stage in time to dance music. They walked to the far side, returned, came downstage to the footlights, walked to the backdrop and were measured for height, then exited. No announcement was made as to whether the girl had been selected. She was notified privately, later. Ziegfeld and Wayburn insisted on complete quiet. The audition to them was just as important as a dress rehearsal.

Producer Pandro Berman and Director Robert Z. Leonard followed the same system in interviewing more than 600 girls for "Ziegfeld Girl," the only difference being that each girl selected as a possibility was later given a screen test. Georgia Carroll, known as "America's most beautiful model," was chosen first.

Rotary Hears of Graphite, A Mineral of Many Uses

E. S. Glauch, mechanical engineer of the Joseph Dixon Crucible Co., Jersey City, N. J., was the guest speaker before the weekly meeting of the Rotary Club in the Elks' Home yesterday afternoon, when he spoke of "Graphite, A Mineral Which Has Many Uses."

Glauch told the group that graphite is a form of carbon, one of a family of three. "Strange as it seems," he declared, "graphite, being one of the softest materials, is in the same family with the diamond, which is the hardest of materials."

"Records indicate that the name 'graphite' was first given to the mineral by the mineralogist, Werner, in 1789."

"Natural graphite is found in many parts of the world; however, it is not mined in many places, this being due to the cost of mining and refining, which offsets the value of graphite recovered. Some deposits are of such low purity that this also makes it unprofitable to operate these deposits."

"The principal sources for graphite used in the United States are Madagascar, Ceylon, Chosen (Korea), Mexico. Some amorphous graphite is mined in Rhode Island."

"There is, of course, considerable difference in the quality of graphites obtained from the different sources, and this governs their use."

"Natural graphite is usually found in laminated or more or less flaky aggregates disseminated in schistose rocks. It also occurs in veins, in which case the mineral usually exhibits either a foliated or fibrous structure. Earthy, amorphous graphite commonly occurs in bedded deposits, and then is considered to be the result of the metamorphism of coal or carbonaceous material."

"Madagascar graphite is distinctly flaky, Ceylon is crystalline, whereas that obtained from Chosen, Mexico and Rhode Island is amorphous."

"The flake and crystalline graphites can be obtained that only contain one to two percent impurities, while the amorphous grades usually contain 15 or more percent impurities. Some selected amorphous graphites may contain in the range of ten percent impurities."

"The purity and physical characteristics of the graphite governs its use in many products. Amorphous graphite is of no value in the manufacture of refractories, such as crucibles, retorts, etc., due, primarily, to its physical characteristics."

"Graphite has been found useful for many purposes, and the following characteristics, at least partially, explain why it meets so many requirements in our everyday lives: It is unctuous—a dry solid lubricant; relatively good electrical conductor; resists high temperatures (its temperature of fusibility is unknown, probably above 3000 degrees centigrade. It is combustible in the presence of oxygen at between 620 and 680 degrees centigrade, but is not altered by heating in a vessel free of air); chemically inert; a good conductor of heat; low coefficient of expansion; non-magnetic; specific gravity of 2.1 to 2.3; Moh's scale of hardness less than one."

"Graphite has many uses and practically every person uses graphite or graphite products directly, or products in which graphite enters into their manufacture."

ONE IN FORTY THOUSAND

For every practical invention there are dozens of crackpot schemes for improving military and naval power. The layman, in his bewilderment, will do well to consider the source before expecting the impossible or dismissing every invention as impractical.

The genius that sponsors the latest important naval invention is that of Charles F. Kettering, whose words are worth heeding if anyone's are. Mr. Kettering invented the self-starter and a number of other gadgets which actually work and which have improved the lot of the motoring public to a degree which almost entitles him to be called the patron saint of the highways.

If he can, as he claims, clear the seaways of enemy submarines his part in the Battle of the Atlantic may be decisive. Mr. Kettering gives no hint of the exact nature of the new invention which he promises will curb the U-boat menace. He does admit that the device is aimed at the detection of submarines when they are on the surface at night recharging batteries.

He points out that all submarines must come to the surface for long intervals for this purpose. All submarine detectors today function only when the under-water craft are submerged. Mr. Kettering would catch them when they are most vulnerable and before they are actually in a position to destroy shipping.

One great advantage claimed for the United States Navy over naval forces of other nations is the type of engine now being installed in its submarines. With that engine American submarines can go 17 to 20 knots and more on the surface—fast enough to keep up with the fleets. Hitherto submarines have had a speed of only 10 or 11 knots.

Mr. Kettering does not say when his new invention will be ready for production. He implies that it will be soon, explaining that he has already spent six years on this invention as head of the General Motors research division. That his experiments have been carried out in collaboration with the United States Navy is significant.

Forty thousand ideas for winning the war have been presented to the National Inventors Council by professional and amateur inventors. But, as Mr. Kettering points out, "you need only one to win a war, if it's good enough."

A trouble with most war inventions is that the enemy learns about them as soon as they are put into use, copies them and thus nullifies the supposed advantage. In the case of submarines an invention for their destruction would be of little use to the Germans, who enjoy a virtual monopoly on submarine warfare.

Crete proves any island can be invaded, says Goering, and if he means England the proof of the plum pudding will be in the eating thereof.

People building new homes have been asked not to install oil burners that cannot be converted to coal. Those who fear a coal shortage may develop should build in the woods.

The price control program ought to control the price of an evening's entertainment when a fellow hasn't much to spend in showing a girl a good time.

When there's nothing else to say it's always safe to rap intolerance.

CHAPTER TWENTY-FOUR

Hortense didn't envy Marie. She had a date to meet André, the chef, in Cannes. Now she would have the whole wonderful day. They would all be free to enjoy themselves—Mrs. Crowder, the stewardess, the mess boy, the pantry boy, probably Fritz, and—

She helped Marie slip on the smart little pink linen dress—so simple and so very expensive a little dress. But no hat? No coat?

"You may go now, Hortense," Marie didn't want to be bothered. She was more and more thrilled at the idea of stealing off to this rendezvous with a woman she knew nothing about. But suppose it was Tony Worth! There had been something between them that afternoon Tony escorted her back to Corfu from the yacht, and stayed and stayed. . . . But Felix Norheim was an old friend of Madame Lascar's. It just might be Norheim she meant as "a mutual friend" in that note. Marie could hardly wait to know.

She ran up on deck, hoping Tony wouldn't see her. . . . I really didn't promise I'd wait for him, she thought. And we'd probably fight again if he knew I was going. . . .

But at that hour—which was ten in the morning—Tony was plunged in the treacherous sleep of exhaustion. He hadn't slept for two nights running. The strain, the worry for Marie, his escape from death, had finally overcome him when, at six, he stretched a moment on his bed. That moment was like a strong whiff of ether. He was plunged into sleep.

Felix Norheim arrayed himself carefully for the day which, for him, meant probable triumph. He strutted, with his small, mincing steps, in front of the mirrors of a luxurious room he never expected to see again. His Aquila, his sleek seaplane was at this moment in Cannes harbor. Each of his agents knew their every move, and the time to a second. . . . of said moves. Before nine o'clock that evening, his files would be transferred to the Aquila, and the Serena would—well, that was to be Hiot's next "accident" job.

Norheim didn't have to worry about Tony Worth or Marie. Tony was Eric Thelme's assignment. And Marie was Lippi's. All Norheim had to think of was Baroness Theresa Lascar and the deal he must make with Haensel and Vorodkin who awaited him at the Hotel Carlton. But—Lieber Gott, can I trust these imbeciles, any of them? That was this business-like nagging Machiavelli's thought as he strolled out of his suite.

He collided with Marie, rushing up the stairs from the berth deck. The Marchese Lippi joined them, his long green eyes turned imploringly on the girl he had desired most from the moment she had turned him down. Now, looking at her hair, her eyes, her skin, he laid aside—or thought he did—his last scruples.

"You are quite irresistible, my dear," Norheim stood smiling at her. His cheekbones lent to his eyes a slant of peculiar persuasion, and there was the vanity of a dandy about the groomed torso, too heavy for his short legs. A red carnation decorated his lapel, and he wore his emerald snake ring, the colors clashing with a hint of barbaric magnificence against the stylish drape of his coat.

"Charming, isn't she?" he asked Nino Lippi, so affably that Marie felt she had misjudged them. They wouldn't cause her injury!

Hans was at the wheel of the launch headed for Cannes. It wasn't her fault if Tony hadn't turned up, she reflected, glancing back at the

ON THE SCREENS

GRAND THEATRE

High comedy at its brightest and best was unveiled yesterday at the gala premiere of Ernst Lubitsch's "That Uncertain Feeling" at the Grand Theatre. This new Lubitsch comedy, which co-stars Melvyn Douglas and Marie Oberon, is being presented by Sol Lesser, who made "Our Town".

Lubitsch, who is known wherever movies are seen as the master of a "touch," is again responsible for bringing to filmgoers everywhere a comedy which is ace-high as entertainment that is witty, light-hearted and unforgettably funny.

BRISTOL THEATRE

Chester Morris, who is a camera fan in the true sense of the word, was one of the most sought-after men in Hollywood this Fall by Pacific Coast Conference football coaches. It seems that Morris, who is currently featured at the Bristol Theatre in "Meet Boston Blackie," which also features Rochelle Hudson and Constance Worth, made completely play-by-play pictures of every important game in Los Angeles this season.

A comparatively new member of Republic's "Three Mesquiteers" western starring team is Rufe Davis, who will be seen in "The Trail Blazers," with which comes today to the Bristol Theatre.

RITZ THEATRE

One motion picture can and often does change the whole course of an actor's career. The public sees a favorite in a new-type role, he gives an outstanding performance, because of its novelty it is pointed up so that it receives better than passing notice and presto, the thing is done.

In Ralph Bellamy's case it took seven years and 50 pictures before the break came.

Just having finished another comedy role, that of a dentist in Errol Flynn's new starring picture for Warner Bros., "Footsteps in the Dark" opening today at the Ritz, Bellamy lists a few others who have shared his shift of fortune.

Recipe of the Month

Lamb Patties

2 pounds lean lamb, ground
6 slices bacon
2 eggs, slightly beaten
1 cup bread crumbs
1 cup milk
6 fresh mushrooms
6 slices pineapple
2 tablespoons butter
Salt and pepper

Season the ground lamb with salt and pepper. Add the slightly beaten eggs. Soak the bread crumbs in milk for a few minutes, then add them to the meat. Mix thoroughly and shape into round cakes. Wrap each with a slice of bacon and fasten with a skewer or toothpicks. Broil or panbroil on both sides. Brown the pineapple slices and mushrooms in butter. Serve a lamb patty on each pineapple slice and top with mushrooms.

Ice Cream Sandwiches

Between thin slices of devil's food cake, sponge cake or butter cake, or between halves of éclair or cream-puff shells, place a serving of ice cream of a flavor to blend well with the cake. Cover with chocolate, butterscotch, marshmallow, maple or fruit sauce, either hot or cold, and top with which comes today to the Bristol Theatre.

Groome directed the organization through peace and strife. His diplomacy always triumphed when there was a cleavage. Firemen are red-blooded men and are saturated with the interest and enthusiasm of their job. There are times, perhaps, when in their eagerness and enthusiasm for advancing the interest of the volunteer fireman they lost sight of the broader aspects of a particular point to be decided. It was during times like those that "Jimmy" Groome would function with his unbiased judgment and broader aspect and would guide the firemen in a path which ultimately worked out for their benefit.

The firemen learned to respect their president and in years gone by they learned that when "Jimmy" Groome made a decision that it was one which would redound to the benefit of their organization.

It is safe to predict that Groome would have been again made president of the Bucks County Firemen's Association had he been willing to have accepted the nomination in March. But, "no," he said and this time he stuck to his determination to drop out and hand the organization over to new hands. "I'm going to quit, fellows," he said. He had a difficult time convincing the "boys" that he was through. They had had "Jimmy" Groome so long and they had learned to let him mould the future of the organization for so many years, that to think of making anyone else president of the Bucks County Firemen's Association was just beyond their comprehension. They liked him; they trusted him, and they knew that he had their interests at heart. Of course there were others in the association capable of being named as president. But that wasn't the question. They had tried "Jimmy" Groome for 25 years and he had never been found wanting.

Four years after the first step was taken to form the Bucks County Firemen's Association James E. Groome was chosen to be the president of the organization. The first motion to be made that a county association of firemen be organized was put forth at a meeting in Southampton in December, 1912. Groome was elected president, succeeding Oscar O. Myer at Perkasie in 1916.

A hasty sketch of the history of the Association shows how it went forward and accomplished much under the Groome regime. In 1916 when Groome first took the helm there were 23 companies affiliated and each company was entitled to have three delegates. There were, of course, no finances to start with. A year later a Death Benefit Fund was originated by Groome and provision was made for the payment of $50 death benefits to members. Now the Association has a balance of about $4,000 in the general fund. There are 42 companies affiliated and 600 individual members.

The Association in 1917 and 1918 had its ranks depleted by the United States entering into World War I. It was a problem for the officers to hold the group together as many firemen throughout the county went into the service of their country.

Groome, as the active head, had to sell the idea to the older men of the county, who were not subject to military service, that they, during the emergency should resume their places as active firemen and come back into the organization and take their places among the ranks of fire fighters.

It was the chief object of Groome to improve the moral of the firemen and to make the fire houses places beyond reproach. "I wanted to show the public that the ideas held by some people about the volunteer firemen and the fire houses, were all wrong." He at once started a movement to raise the social standard of the fire companies to a place of respect and esteem in the minds of all the people. There was an immediate change in the attitude of the firemen. They, through the teachings and constant importunities of Groome became enthusiastic about their job. It ceased to be a hobby with them but became a serious business. The firemen enacted rules and regulations about the conduct of the fire houses and about the conduct of members during parades and annual conventions.

"Train and drill and make yourselves more efficient," was the next step Groome suggested. Get better equipment and assume an individual responsibility to the people of the community, the firemen were told. Groome took some advice given him by the late Judge William C. Ryan very much to heart and immediately put it into practice. The Judge had said: "If you want to make your cause succeed you must develop a healthy and favorable sentiment for your cause among the people."

A move was undertaken by the energetic president to arouse the interest of the women. Groome learned that 1500 fires throughout the nation originated in the home. The way to stop them was to make the women fire-conscious, he at once decided. Women have a place in the political life, professional life and commercial life, why would they not have a place in the affairs of the volunteer fire fighting organizations?

To show that he succeeded in this it might be cited here that the women's auxiliaries have accomplished much. Just a few instances might be given. The movement was started in the little community of Dublin. The auxiliary of Trevose in 10 years has contributed over $4,000 to the cause of the firemen in that area. Warrington auxiliary has given more than $5000 in eight years. Encouragement was given to the women because it was reasoned that the men were already fire conscious and that if the women became likewise that the family unit would be complete.

An interesting experience is told about once when Mr. Groome was speaking at a firemen's banquet in Morrisville. Interrupted in his talk by a woman peering through an open door and then retiring, Mr. Groome called to her to ascertain what was wanted. The woman entered the hall and walked up to the speaker and handed him a check for $500 for the Morrisville company. "There were no strings attached to that check, either," says Groome in recalling the incident.

After a continuous campaign to prevent fires the fire losses in Bucks County began to drop. In 1926 the fire loss was $580,000, while in the year ending June 1st of this year the loss is given as $222,826. The lowest loss occurred in 1939, when it was $128,000. The population of the county in 1926 was 97,000, while today it is 107,000.

Fire police were named to ferret out the causes of fires of mysterious origin and to learn the causes of all fires. In one year there were 18 successful prosecutions on the charge of arson. Much was accomplished through the co-operation of the county judges and the district attorneys and their staffs. Mr. Groome gives much credit to Arthur M. Eastburn, former county district attorney, and Edward M. Bieker, the present district attorney, for their fine co-operation. "We were shown how to present our evidence and how to assemble our facts in the cases to be brought before the court."

In one year, 61 barns were destroyed by fire, but this figure has been greatly reduced today.

The firemen found in fighting country fires that oftentimes their heavy apparatus could not reach the blaze due to light bridges constructed by the farmers over small streams and that they would often be handicapped by lack of water. Here another educational campaign was started. The farmers were encouraged to build heavier bridges and also to dam streams on their farms to furnish a water supply.

Interest was maintained in the meetings because Mr. Groome planned a program of local discussions and used the talents of the firemen. The meetings became very interesting and never ceased to draw a good attendance.

"I want to say a word of appreciation for the press of Bucks County. Their co-operation has been wonderful and they have been a great factor in bringing about the accomplishment of the firemen. They helped us sell the idea of fire prevention to the people. They reported the facts and were generous in the space they gave."

"Personally, I many times felt as though there were men more capable than I and men who were better equipped to handle the affairs of the firemen. There were many practical men like the chiefs of the various companies, and William L. Stackhouse, who for years was fire marshal of the county. I never refused an invitation to address a group of Bucks County firemen because I appreciated the work the men were doing."

The latest and last step undertaken by the firemen at the suggestion of Groome was that of nine months ago when a Preliminary Planning Committee was set up.

"I had read in the papers about the terrible conditions in London," says Groome. This committee is to name others whose identities are to remain secret. This committee will keep their eyes and ears open for those of subversive tendencies and to keep a watch for fires of mysterious origin.

The committee consists originally of five members, headed by Sheriff William L. Stackhouse, who are to get a complete picture of the county and serve as "listening posts." They will plan the co-ordination of the efforts of the various companies in the county to work as units if emergencies should arise. When their combined efforts are needed. At a recent meeting, 40 of the 42 fire chiefs in Bucks County were present.

Mr. Groome during his 25 years of service missed only two meetings. Once he was away on business and once he was blocked by snow at Newtown while enroute to Quakertown.

Groome has handed the gavel which he never wielded at a meeting during his 25 years of service over to Moses Coyle, Point Pleasant, as his successor.

with the Society of Friends, included the following: "The Early History and Philosophy of the Friends," William Patterson, president of the class of 1941; "William Penn and the Customs of the Quakers," Voltairine DeCleyre; "Middletown Meeting," Eleanor Allen; "The Contributions of the Quakers," Irene Hopkins.

Mr. Walton, the speaker of the evening, himself a member of the Society of Friends, expressed interest in the subject selected by the class for this year's project, and continued the trend of thought for the evening by speaking on "What Quakers Expect Now." He recalled that George Fox, early Quaker leader, had as the foremost idea in his religious life that the spirit of primitive Christianity should be restored. "Fox felt that if one had that spirit he was right with the world, and the world was right with him. And he preached that doctrine for nearly 20 years. William Penn was one of the group supporting Fox, and carrying forward that work. Thus we find that Fox, the man who started out to preach the message of spiritual life, ended up by starting a religious order. That was not his intention at the outset, he being mainly engrossed in the welfare of the soul of man."

The speaker in considering how so frequently individuals rely on outward form, urged against losing sight of the spiritual life. "The most serious question with us is 'How true are men and women to the inner spirit?'" continued Mr. Walton, as he advised against the ties that the pell-mell rush of present-day life is so likely to create. "We should think. We should appeal to the depths of our nature before reaching conclusions. He then mentioned that it is men who have lost faith in people and in God who need dictators."

After considering the need of greater spiritual strength in each individual, with the cutting down of indulgences, controlling of tempers, and exercise of more serious thought, the Newtown resident assured that "We will come then to a sound and enduring life, through consciousness of the spirit of God." He commended to the graduates as the best contribution a person can make to humanity "To grow in the spirit of God," for "The very highest thing is to know God."

EXPANDING FACILITIES AID PNEUMONIA CASES

State Dep't of Health This Year
Able To Handle 30,000
Such Cases

TWICE NUMBER FOR 1940

By Leonard Apfelbaum
I. N. S. Staff Correspondent
HARRISBURG, June 20—Expanding facilities of the State Department of Health this year are expected to permit handling of 30,000 pneumonia patients, twice the number cared for in 1940.

Despite the increased efforts, 2,700 men, women and children in Pennsylvania will probably die from the disease during the year, according to Dr. Dale C. Stahle, director of the pneumonia control division of the State Health Department.

In the last five years Pennsylvania has made important strides in combating pneumonia, pointed out Dr. Stahle. A declining death toll from the disease is emphasized in these figures: 1937, approximately 7100; 1938, 5800; 1939, 5000. During the first five months of 1941 there were 160 fewer deaths than during the corresponding period a year ago.

"We treated 15,000 patients in our 180 pneumonia-control stations last year," Dr. Stahle said, "and found that a majority of the cases could be cured by chemo-therapeutic agents."

The physician explained that Pennsylvania uses two methods in curing the disease: serum, dependable, but very expensive and used only where necessary; the other method, comparatively new, calls for the use of either sulfapyridine or sulfathiazole.

"We try to determine in each case whether the patient will respond to the drugs," he said, "and if he will, we confine our treatment to that rather than administer the serum."

Dr. Stahle explained that in some cases it is necessary to use both types in curing the patient. Rest, fresh air and wholesome food are also prime requisites, he explained.

"You can't prevent the disease," he added, "so the next best thing is to give the patient the proper care and treatment so as to cure it. Proper medical attention is mandatory."

Dr. Stahle disclosed that numerous other states, including New York, Illinois, Tennessee and Texas, have adopted a pneumonia control program similar to the one used in Pennsylvania. He said that medical examiners from various states have either written to his department or viewed at first hand the work being carried on in this state.

Another tribute to the success of the program was demonstrated when the U. S. Army and Navy adopted pneumonia control systems similar to Pennsylvania's.

The story of the progress made here was recently related by Dr. Stahle at the annual convention of the American Medical Association, in Cleveland, where delegates manifested considerable interest in the use of sulfa drugs in treating the disease.

But the work of the pneumonia control division is only one phase of the extensive health program underway in the State.

Secretary of Health Dr. John J. Shaw announced in May, for the first time in the 35 years history of the department, the list of applicants for admission to a state tuberculosis sanatorium had been eradicated. Completion of the new infirmary at Mont Alto and addition of several new wards at Hamburg Sanatorium made the absorption of the waiting list possible, he said.

CONSUMER CHEMISTRY COURSE IS OF INTEREST

Quakertown Students Are Much Enthused Over Practical Experiments

MAKE SCENTED GLUE

QUAKERTOWN, June 20—The most interested students at Quakertown high school appear to be the students following the course of consumer chemistry, which is in charge of T. L. Purnell, head of the science department of the high school.

The pupils have been experimenting in the growing of vegetables and flowers without soil; and the making of polishes, cosmetics, ointments, dyes, wax items, plastics, and electro-plated busts of people and animals.

The course was designed primarily for students who do not expect to attend college, but are anxious to attain a knowledge of chemistry for application to problems of the home. In the mixing of cosmetics, salves, polish and the like, standard formulas are used and the ingredients are weighed in proper proportions to make the small quantities needed for the home.

Although the preliminary instructions are given by Mr. Purnell, the students are permitted to use initiative in the making of various articles and the results are often as humorous as they are practical.

It is not unusual for some of the students to create scented fly spray, cold cream, cleansing cream, shaving cream, wart remover, candles and even ink, dyes and glue. The fish smell of glue can be overcome by a perfume so that the repairing of articles can be done in the absence of the usual, nauseating smell.

The class is taught to make candles of various hues, sizes and shapes. Emphasis is placed on the creation of seasonal decorative articles, such as model turkeys and artificial fruit for Thanksgiving Day, colored pine cones and wreaths for Christmas, chicks and eggs for Easter, and artificial articles for Halloween.

The class is also taught how to make rubber moulds for the making of images of persons and of animals. They are taught how to pour casts and how to finish plaster models.

Many articles of wax and of plaster of paris are made. The students are instructed as to the proper ingredients to use in order to make the pieces stand up under heat or cold. They are also taught to make glue and rubber cements as well as paints and inks of all colors.

Lessons in the manufacture of pure food dyes for the coloring of cake icings and eggs are taught, among them how to make green dye from spinach, pink from beets, and yellow from carrots.

It is with interest that the students study the making of masks, crayons, chalk in various colors, mop oil, scalp lotion, hair setting lotion, stain remover, sun-tan lotion, and a variety of other articles.

simultaneously putting a ceiling over both prices and wages but it has not even given its Price Control Administrator, Mr. Leon Henderson, the authority he needs to be an effective official in the one field in which he is supposed to function. The net result is that prices have been steadily rising despite Mr. Henderson. When he presses down on the price structure at one point, it bulges out at another.

THE price rise in May was the sharpest rise since the war started in 1939, and there is literally nothing to keep prices from going higher. This applies both to food prices and to commodities. Statutory power to deal with prices, it is said, will be asked of Congress in "the very near future" as a substitute for the hazy authority with which Mr. Henderson now operates. But that declaration has been made before and nothing has come of it. Meanwhile, Mr. Henderson is left in an impossible position. He is supposed to cope with runaway prices but has been given nothing to use in coping.

"INFORMAL pressure" and "moral support of the community" are all right in their way but are not genuinely effective. But even if Mr. Henderson had the statutory powers proposed, he still would not be able really to control prices until in some way wages were stabilized. It obviously is impossible to hold prices down if wages are going steadily to rise. Yet not a single step can this Administration be induced to take to keep wages from unreasonably rising. On the contrary, the Secretary of Labor takes pride in the fact that wages rise out of proportion to the cost of living.

FOR example, on June 14 the Labor Department gave out statistics to show that in two months more than 800,000 workers had received increases; that, while living costs have gone up 2.4 per cent. in the last few months, weekly earnings in manufacturing industries have gone up 15.8—or about seven times as much. Among economists there is considerable speculation as to how high wages will go under present circumstances. The general opinion is about 10 per cent. between now and the end of the year, but it is agreed that next year living costs will rise much higher and that the pressure for still higher wages will then become irresistible and inevitable.

IT is a situation full of danger; but it is not Mr. Henderson's fault. He knows the facts and, under the circumstances, is doing as good a job as can be done. But no one can do this without full authority. And that he has not got. The President agrees as to the necessity but cannot be got to make a move to put a ceiling over wages, without which a ceiling over prices is absurd. Until, either by Executive order or by law, both price and wage control is made possible, everything that is being done about the former is futile and foolish.

PRACTICALLY everybody agrees about that, which makes the failure to act the more reprehensible. There are two kinds of wage increases. One is the increase which must be passed on in higher prices. This raises defense costs and requires further wage increases in a scramble to keep up. The other is the increase that comes out of profits—and that the Government considers good. But narrowed profits means smaller taxes. Thus the Government is squeezed by its own conflicting policies. In the end it must acknowledge that wage increases are of vital general concern; the Mediation Board must consider them not, as it now does, as a means to buy off defense strikes, but in the light of the effect upon prices, defense costs, living costs and the whole national economy. The danger is that the acknowledgment may come too late.

THE fundamental fact, which wise leadership should convey to the wage earners, is that, no matter how much wages may go up, if prices go up, too, the wage earner is no better off—is worse off, in fact, because more than any other class he will suffer from the threatened inflation. Wise leadership ought to tell the wage earner that the effort to keep wages as well as prices under control is in his interest instead of demagogically encouraging him to think that those who point this out are inimical to labor. The real enemies of labor are those who mislead the workingman on this question.
